As originally designed and built, the Second State Bank Branch in Vincentes was a 2 1/2 story brick building in the Greek Revival Style in the middle of the block between Busseron and Broadway Streets facing east onto Second Street. The outside dimensions of the building are 48' by 36' and there is a 12' X 36' portico with four two story, sectioned, smooth, sandstone pillars of the modified doric style.

The bank is built of local hand-made brick. It has decorated boxed cornices with return and decorated friezes constructed of several different odd-sized bricks with rounded, shaped, or beveled ends. Long 14-inch bricks are used for protruding ornaments below the cornices. The bricks of the front facade and ornamental cornices and friezes are covered with plaster to give the appearance of ornamental cut stone.

The main doorway of the building is recessed with six plain wooded panels on each side. Each of the double doors is built of wood and has twelve plain recessed panels. All windows in the building are two-sash with six panes in each sash.

The double-doored entrance of the Bank opens into the "Main Banking Room" with interior dimensions of 26' X 31'. This room has six large brick columns that extend two stories and are covered with plaster to give them a fluted effect. The columns are surmounted by a huge iron ring on which the large bell dome rests. On top of the dome is a small cupola that containes six windows and provides natural light for the room. The north and south walls of the room each contain one tall rectangular window. The east wall contains two doorways to the "Traders and Trappers Room" and one to the vault.

The vault is located in the northwest corner of the building. It has internal dimensions of 9' X 8' and walls 2 1/2 to 5 feet thick. The vault is made of hand-riveted steel, and its heavy steel doors are believed to have been build in France.

In the southwest corner of the building is the 16' X 20' "Traders and Trappers Room". The room has its own outside entrance in the north wall, and the north and west walls each have one window. A steep wooden staircase rises from the "Trader and Trappers Room" to a 16' X 20' second floor room at the west end of the building. There are two tall rectangular windows in both the north and south walls of this room. From the second story room another steep staircase rises to a "hidden" room surrounding the dome of the third floor.

After 1858, when the Second State Bank's charter expired, the building was used for several different purposes and many changes were made in the building's internal and external appearance. In 1965 the State of Indiana restored the Old State Bank to its original appearance. Most of the structural material in the building (including most bricks, columns, and flooring) are original. Non-original material conforms as nearly as possible to the original.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

In 1834 the Indiana General Assembly chartered the Second State Bank with headquarters in Indianapolis and twelve branch banks around the state, including one in Vincennes. The Vincennes branch began operating in temporary rented offices almost immediately after receiving its charter late in 1834. In 1838 its permanent building, now known as the Old State Bank, was completed on North Second Street, and the Bank operated form this building until its charter expired in 1858.

The Old State Bank in Vincennes is one of the oldest existing bank structures in Indiana. It was designed and built by John Moore, a local contractor and civic leader who for over 30 years was the builder of most of the principal public and private buildings in the city. The front facade, cornices, and "Main Banking Room" columns of the building are excellent examples of the frontier building practice of covering brick with plaster to give the appearance of ornamental stone. Due to the extremely high cost of ornamental stone this was a very common building practice on the frontier, and the Old State Bank is one of the finest examples of this method still remaining in the Vincennes area.

The fortress-like construction of the Old State Bank building and the original function of many of its rooms vividly exemplify the additions and modifications forced on the more "civilized" institutions of the time by the frontier's harsh realities. For example, the Second State Bank maintained the "Traders and Trappers Room" at the rear of the bank where their "lower class" customers could exchange their goods for gold without mingling with the more "gentile" clients in the "Main Banking Room." The Directors Room" on the bank's second floor was used as a meeting room by bank officers, but it also served as sleeping quarters for the clerks, all of whom were required to live in the building in order to increase nighttime security. The "hidden" room on the third floor was originally intended to house a military garrison in times of invasion and civil insurrection.

The charter of the Second State Bank was carefully drawn to insure the soundness of the bank and its currency while at the same time providing a means for economic expansion and improved government services in the State. The financial soundness of the bank was established beyond question during the panic of 1837. At the height of the panic the Second State Bank was still making a clear profit, and while virtually all other bank notes in the country were worthless, its notes were at a discount of only 5% outside the State. During the panic it was the only bank in the entire U.S. possessing government deposits that offered or paid specie to the Federal Government. It was the only bank west of the Alleghanies not to fail during the panic.

(8) SIGNIFICANCE CONTINUED

The second State Bank provided much of the capital for the internal improvements and commercial and industrial expansion in Indiana from 1837 to 1858. Just before and again just after the Panic of 1837 the bank saved State Government form bankruptcy by assuming state debts and suspending the State's payments to the bank as they fell due. In addition, the State's stock in the Second State Bank provided a profit of $2,500,000. This profit was used to pay most of the State's operating expences form 1837 to 1858 and left a large enough surplus to establish the State's school fund.
