Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Harry A. Keplinger House is situated in the southwest section of Fort Wayne, on the southeast corner of Webster and Creighton Streets. The 2 1/2 story brick structure features a rock-faced stone foundation on the front facade, and stone quoins below the stone water table on its other facades. Its steeply pitched roof and dormers, its round towers, and the use of rock-faced stone reflect the influence of the Richardsonian Romanesque.

The house is basically square in plan, with a round, two-story tower at each of the front corners, and a larger dormer centered between the two conical roofs. A one-story projecting bay is located on the west side. All windows in the house are double-hung; those on the front and side bay are rectangular, and the rest are segmentally arched. Window glass on the towers is curved.

Between the towers on the main (north) facade is a wide porch. Its foundation is rock-faced limestone, supporting a brick balustrade wall, and flared brick columns. Resting on the columns are low, wide arches of wood, followed by a plain fascia, and then the roof. Centered at the second story above the porch are three windows, separated by narrow brick muntins, with a corbelled brick string course at the lintel line.

Interest is provided below the eaves by exposed rafter ends. The hipped roof is slate. A large, gable-roofed dormer pierces the roof directly above the previously mentioned triple windows. It has three smaller windows, their upper sash multi-paned, with a dressed limestone continuous lintel. Above the center window is an arched window, giving the ensemble a Palladian configuration. A stone, ogee-shaped archivolt outlines the brick arch. The tip of the pointed gable parapet is also of stone, as are the decorative caps at the lower ends of the rake.

The towers have a plain frieze at the eave-line of the house roof, with the conical slate roof starting above this. The tower roofs are capped with metal cones. Two smaller dormers, not alike, are located on the west face of the roof. A modern wooden deck has been built at the rear of the roof.

The front door has a magnificent cut glass window. In the small foyer is a tile floor, followed by another door with cut glass. Inside is a large entry/stair hall with an original fireplace. Off the entry hall are four rooms: the parlor, living room, dining room, and kitchen. The living room and parlor include the two tower spaces; the parlor has an original fireplace. The dining room features a beamed ceiling, and the projecting west bay. All interior woodwork is original.

At the stairway landings are two arched windows with cut glass. On the second floor are a large central hall and three bedrooms, two of which have original fireplaces. The third bedroom is currently used as a kitchen.

Continuing from the hallway is another stair, leading to a third-floor apartment; both were added in 1972. In 1973 the back porch was removed, and an office was added. A c.1910 garage was remodeled in 1973.

Statement of Significance (in two paragraphs)

The Harry A. Keplinger House is significant for both its architecture and for its association with a prominent Fort Wayne businessman and banker. In an excellent state of preservation, the Keplinger House is one of the most intact of Fort Wayne's more elaborate houses from this period.

With its pair of distinctive towers and steeply gabled central dormer, the house is one of the most elaborate structures in an otherwise more modest neighborhood. It is an excellent blend of architectural styles popular in the last decade of the 19th century, and was one of the earliest structures in Williams' Woodland Park Addition.

Harry A. Keplinger, a prominent turn-of-the-century businessman, built this lavish home for himself and his family around 1893. Keplinger started out as a bookkeeper for the Hamilton National Bank, where he was later promoted to teller. He went on to assist in the establishment of several Fort Wayne financial institutions.

In 1889, Keplinger helped organize the Allen County Building and Loan Association, later Citizens' Trust Company, serving as treasurer of this organization. In 1892 he helped form the White National Bank, where he became cashier. When this bank merged with First National Bank in 1905, Keplinger became vice-president of the new organization.

In addition to his banking activities, Keplinger also owned interests in Service Coal Company and C. T. Pidgeon Millinery Company.
