DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The E. C. Bickel House (c. 1870) is a two-story residence of the Carpenter Gothic style popular at that time. It is of balloon frame construction with clapboard siding and sits on a "modern" cinderblock foundation. The flat roofed porch wraps the front (south) and west side of the building. Here it dies into the short leg of the T-shaped floor plan. The eave of the porch is decorated with ornate wood scrollwork and a dentil strip typical of the Carpenter style. The roof is supported by eight heavily bracketed square columns and the handrail is carried by short, vasselike spindles.

There is an abundant variety of detail around the exterior. This variety includes the leaded glass borrowed lights at each side of the front door, two over two double hung windows with gabled caps of the Greek Revival, three windows in the dining room wall with arched heads in the Italianate Mode and upstairs, six-foot high double hung windows that have their sills at the second floor level also have gabled caps.

Inside the front entrance is a simple, but elegant, open stairway of walnut. Most of the interior woodwork is the original, walnut stained and varnished.

This little house has been moved two times. Originally, it stood facing Prospect Street and east of its present location to what is now the northwest corner of Bower and Prospect. In 1906 it was moved to the north so that it would stand next door to the house Mr. Bickel built in 1907, which stands in its place today. It was moved again in 1912 to its present location. The house has then stood in three locations within the boundaries of Lot #1 of Bickel's 1st Addition, the original site.

In studying photographs of the house in 1899 and 1906, we find that several alterations have been made in the process of these moves. As the house originally stood, at a corner, there were two sets of steps up to the porch and an additional secondary entrance at the point where the porch dies into the house. The handrails and spindles for the front steps are now being restored using the old photos as a guide. The arched windows were originally part of a bay window which projected from the dining room. The bay had four of these windows, three of which were placed flat in the wall at the same location. Most likely, this was done to facilitate moving the house. On the other side of the house, a fireplace and chimney have been added, probably at the time of the last move.

Also evident in old photographs is a barn to the rear, and in a later picture a simple iron fence around the yard.

At this time, the owner is having the house cleaned and much general repair work done. She plans to repair the existing stiles and roof damage on the porch as well as to reconstruct the railing along the steps. The leaded glass around the door is also being restored.

The owner has demolished a structurally unsound garage which was a much later addition. This garage will be replaced with a new one located to the rear of the property. When repairs are complete, the owner plans to rent two apartments in the house.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Emmanuel C. Bickel, though he was a man of limited financial means, left Elkhart a legacy of community service and civic development. Lawyer, realtor, developer and more, he initiated many of the projects which moved Elkhart into its position as one of the major industrial cities of Northern Indiana.

Born to a farming family in 1850, E. C. Bickel was raised in a rural environment, educated at the district school and for five months attended the "Goshen Institute". The next three years were spent farming in the summer and teaching at the district school during winter months.

His family moved to Missouri in 1870 and he, again, in 1873, moved to the territory of Colorado. Returning to Elkhart in late autumn of 1873, he settled with his uncle, M. F. Shively and began to study law. Later he formed a partnership with J. M. VanFleet and served as Deputy Prosecuting Attorney.

Mr. Bickel married Marietta Smith in 1876. Being twenty-five years of age, he vigorously applied himself to his studies and became involved in the social and semi-public works of the town. While working to establish literary and debating societies, he also established the Elkhart Lecture Association which was said to have brought more notoriety to Elkhart than all of the town's factories combined.

E. C. Bickel's first experience as a developer came when he became involved in a committee appointed to study the possibility of getting the Cincinnati, Wabash and Michigan Railroad extended from Goshen, through Elkhart and on to Lake Michigan. After a considerable local subsidy was raised and affirmative vote taken by the town, Mr. Bickel was given the task of securing the right-of-way. The acquisition was accomplished at two-thirds of its estimated cost.

This first experience in development must have whetted Mr. Bickel's appetite, for he drifted out of the law practice into more promotion and construction work.

Working to develop the Citizen's Street Railway in the early 1880's, he went before an astonished Common Council and secured the franchise on the strength of a 100% pre-sold local subsidy. The citizens then reaffirmed their confidence in Mr. Bickel by electing him secretary and general manager. He held this post for a number of years.

In the several years following the formation of the Citizen's Street Railroad, Mr. Bickel exercised his talents by developing a 115 acre housing project known as "McNaughton Park". Also developed in this time period was the Highland Park Bridge, the "Beeline" Railroad and the Elkhart Building, Loan and Savings Association. Each of these developments were the direct result of efforts by E. C. Bickel.

At this time, Mr. Bickel formed an acquaintance with H. G. Bucklen. The teaming of Mr. Bucklen's money and Mr. Bickel's business experience and untiring drive would prove to be the City's major assets in its growth towards major importance.

To warm up the machinery, Mr. Bickel suggested that what Elkhart really needed to make it boom was a first class hotel. Bucklen responded by buying the "Clifton House Hotel" and rebuilding it in grand style.

The pattern was established, and the team of Bucklen and Bickel set out on their most ambitious undertaking, this being the formation of the Riverside Factory District. The initiative for this undertaking was the announcement by the Pratt Carriage Works that they would be leaving town to a location which promised more working capital and a more commodious working environment.

To summarize the agreement arbitrated by Mr. Bickel, the town made the following concessions to keep the Pratt Company in town:

- 1) Buy the existing carriage factory.
- 2) Donate a six acre site for the construction of a new factory.
- 3) Extend the existing Cincinnati, Wabash and Michigan Railroad and donate its free use as well as a good switching service.
- 4) Provide an additional $10,000 incentive toward the new construction.

Of these four demands, Mr. Bucklen was persuaded to assume the financial responsibility for the first three; Mr. Bickel would donate the time required to raise the $10,000 from the citizenry. This was accomplished on his donated time in a period of three months.

By 1894, the Bell Telephone Company had been in Elkhart for eleven years. Their rates, however, were twice the national average and there were only 100 possible connections and no night service. When a committee headed by Mr. Bickel requested lower rates and better service, they were insulted by the Bell Company. This served only to irritate Bickel, who promptly canvassed the town for subscribers to a new local telephone company. The resulting enthusiastic response led him to apply for a new franchise. Although the Bell Telephone Company cut their rates to one-quarter of their previous amount, the new company grew to the size of 5,000 connections and provided toll-free service throughout the county. Mr. Bickel was later to establish his phone company in three other Indiana cities as well as in Cleveland and Mansfield, Ohio.

From this brief summary of his life's accomplishments, we can see that Emmanuel C. Bickel was indeed a man who found pleasure in achieving something of service to his fellow citizens. And that largely due to his own efforts he effected major changes in the development of Elkhart, Indiana.
