Lirmerlost Cabin, completed in 1895, is a 14 room (including entrance hall and attic), two-story, log structure facing north on East 6th Street in Geneva, Indiana. The exterior of the house is built of Wisconsin white cedar logs, stained in their natural color. The logs were mitered at the corners and chinked with cement. The upper story and roof is surfaced with redwood shingles stained the same color as the logs. The north and the north half of the east walls of the house are fronted with a one-story, L-shaped porch with a vertical, solid-log railing and log pillars. At the southeast corner of the home is a gazebo-like porch with a verticle, solid log railing and one story log pillars. The house has a modified mansard roof.

The front entrance of the home is located at the west end of the north wall and is reached by crossing the L-shaped porch. The front door opens into a narrow entrance hall paneled in quarter-saved oak. To the west of the entrance hall is the stairway leading to the second floor. The dining room is at the south end of the entrance hall, and the library is to the east of the entrance hall.

The library 20' x 14' has a large window in the north wall and three small windows in the east wall. There is a fireplace in the south wall with doors on either side. Above the fireplace, along the entire west wall, and between all windows on the north and east walls are built-in bookcases of oak. The room is paneled in quarter-saved oak. The door to the west of the library leads to the dining room. The door to the east of the fireplace leads to the music room.

The dining room 21' x 14' has wainscoting of quarter-saved oak and plaster moldings of a native plant called "Solomon's Seal" on the ceiling. There is a fireplace with a three-cornered cupboard of oak above it in the northeast corner of the room. There are also built-in oak cabinets along the south wall and in the northwest corner of the dining room. The conservatory 6' x 10', whose principal feature is a large bay window, can be reached by double French doors at the west end of the dining room. A doorway in the south wall of the dining room leads to a back hallway, and a doorway in the east wall leads to the music room.

A music room 20' x 18' has plaster wainscoting and ornate plaster moldings of musical instruments along the top of the walls and on the ceiling. There is a fireplace in the northwest corner; a doorway to the library in the north wall; a large window in the east wall; and two doorways in the south wall.

There are sliding oak doors between the entrance hall, library, dining room, and music room.

The doorway at the east end of the music room's south wall leads to a bedroom 14' x 10'. This room has a fireplace in the southwest corner; a window in the east wall; and a window and door to the outside in the south wall. The outside door leads to the gazebo-like porch.

The doorway at the east end of the music room's south wall leads to another bedroom 13' x 11'. This room has a fireplace in the southwest corner; two windows in the south wall; and a door leading to the back hall in the west wall.

The back hallway leads to the back stairway; a kitchen 13' x 12' in the southwest corner of the house; and a bathroom 10' x 7' to the east of the kitchen. The bathroom and kitchen both have built-in oak cabinets and oak wainscoting.
The front stairway of the Limberlost Cabin is made of solid oak, and the stairwell is paneled in quarter-sawn oak. At the top of the stairway is a small hallway running north and south. The east wall of the hallway has a small alcove with a plaster molded female figure in the wall.

There are four bedrooms upstairs. The southwest 21' x 16' and northeast 13' x 11' bedrooms have fireplaces. The southeast and northwest bedrooms have dimensions of 16' x 11' and 13' x 11' respectively.

The back stairway leads to a small hall at the south corner of the house. This hall is a door to the attic and a door to the southeastern bedroom. All six bedrooms in the house have plaster walls and oak woodwork. All the floors in the house are oak. The house was originally lighted by gas and heated by gas burners in the fireplaces.

Mrs. Porter, the designer and original occupant of the home, moved Limberlost Cabin in 1914. In the years following Mrs. Porter's departure several minor alterations were made to the house. Most of the original gas lighting fixtures remain, although they have been converted to electricity. Central heating was added and running water was installed in the kitchen and bathroom. None of the original plumbing fixtures remain in the kitchen, but the bathroom still has the original bathtub and marble sink. The important features of the house remain as designed by Mrs. Porter.
Gene Stratton Porter was Indiana's most widely-read woman author. She wrote twelve novels, seven nature books, a book for children, two books of poetry, one book of essays, and numerous magazine articles for OUTING, Century, Ladies Home Journal, McCall's, and Good Housekeeping. Mrs. Porter is estimated to have had fifty million readers, and her works were translated into seven foreign languages and braille. Three of her novels, Girl of the Limberlost, Michael O'Halloran, and The Harvester were made into motion pictures and were great box-office successes. Mrs. Porter was also a noted naturalist, photographer, and illustrator.

In 1895 Mrs. Porter, then 32 years old, her husband, Charles, and her daughter, Jeannette, moved into their new home which they called "Limberlost Cabin" after the great Limberlost Swamp which stretched for many miles just south of their home. Local residents had named this area "Limberlost" after an early surveyor of the area, "Limber Jim" Corbus, who reputedly was lost in the quicksand of the swamp.

Limberlost Cabin was a fourteen-room log structure designed by Mrs. Porter to be elegant while still blending with its magnificent natural surroundings. Very few log homes were built during this period which could match the Limberlost Cabin for either size or elegance. It is certainly both one of the largest and most elegant log homes of this period still remaining in Indiana.

Living as they did on the fringe of the Limberlost swamp, Gene Porter soon found herself fascinated with the wide variety of unusual flora and fauna of the area, and she became a serious student of the local wildlife and wildflowers. In the course of her studies she became proficient in producing extremely accurate watercolor illustrations of plants, animals, and insects. She also became interested in photography as a means of depicting the natural state in its true form. She soon mastered photography so completely that the manufacturer of the photographic print paper used by Mrs. Porter sent a representative to ascertain how she was able to get such exceptional results with their brand of paper.

During her first several years at Limberlost Mrs. Porter wrote, photographed, and illustrated several magazine articles on nature studies. In 1903 her first book, Song of the Cardinal was published. This was a fictional work, but was intertwined with fact and contained many of her nature photographs and water-color illustrations.

From 1903 to 1913 Mrs. Porter published five more novels: Freckles 1904 At the Foot of the Rainbow 1907, A Girl of the Limberlost 1909, The Harvester 1911, and Laddie 1913. While living at Limberlost she also Virtually all of the fiction written by Mrs. Porter was interwoven with facts about nature, and many of the characters depicted in her novels were actually composites of several of her real life acquaintances. Since Mrs. Porter wrote of the lives and locales that were familiar to her, visitors to her Limberlost home can still see many of the places described in her novels. These include the "Dream Girl's Porch", "Freckles Window", "The Harvester's Fireplace", and "Dream Girl's Room".

SIGNIFICANCE - Continued

By 1913 the magnificent Limberlost Swamp had been drained and Gene Stratton Porter sought another site for her home and work. In 1914 Mrs. Porter, now a world-famous author, moved from Limberlost to her new home on Sylvan Lake near Rome City, Indiana. Here she wrote 3 novels, one book of nature studies, and a children's book. In 1920 she left Indiana permanently and moved to California for reasons of health. She continued to write in California until her death in 1924.

Limberlost Cabin was presented to the State of Indiana in 1947 by the Limberlost Conservation Association of Geneva. It has been maintained by the state as "Limberlost State Memorial" since 1947.
