Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Anderson Bank Company Building is a seven-story office building located at the corner of 10th and Meridian Streets in downtown Anderson, Indiana. A rectangular-plan structure with a flat roof, the building has a steel-reinforced concrete frame covered with brick and stone veneer in a pier and spandrel configuration. The exterior is decorated with molded terra cotta and carved limestone panels in the Art Deco style popular in the late 1920's, when this building was constructed.

The south facade features limestone and granite facing on the ground floor level, limestone veneer on the second floor and brick veneer on the upper stories and parapet. Fixed metal-frame windows are employed on the ground floor and are protected by a canopy installed in 1963; all other window openings throughout this facade contain large rectangular one-over-one, double-hung windows. Alternating wide and narrow piers rise from the second floor level of the facade to the parapet and serve to delineate the window openings. The spandrel areas below the second and third floor windows of this facade contain stylized limestone carvings, while those below the upper floor windows are embellished with a simple rectangle of corbelled brick. The large piers feature a vertical terra cotta ornament at the seventh floor window level, while additional terra-cotta panels form a horizontal banding just above the seventh-floor window lintels. The parapet features recessed brick panels, limestone trim and a stone cap.

The east facade of the building, like the south facade, features granite and limestone veneer on the ground floor level, limestone veneer on the second floor, and brick on the upper stories and parapet. The carved limestone and molded terra cotta detailing here is also similar to that on the south facade, as is the fenestration. Unlike the south facade, however, this elevation features piers of three different widths arranged to suggest a symmetrical pavilion comprising the northern two-thirds of the facade. The parapet wall over this section is surmounted by a pediment. The main entryway is located in the center of this section, and consists of paired entry doors on the ground floor level surmounted by large, rectangular windows on the second floor. The legend, "Anderson Bank," appears over these windows, and is, itself, surmounted by a foliated limestone label mold. The southern section of this facade is very similar in appearance to the structure's south facade.

The entire rear (west) facade of the building is faced with grey-buff brick identical to that used on the south and east elevations. The terra-cotta detailing just below the parapet is also identical to that found on these other facades. The upper levels of the north facade were also faced with grey-buff brick, but until recently, the lower floors were obscured by an adjacent structure. Since the demolition of that structure, the newly-exposed sections of the north wall have been faced with gray-buff brick to match the rest of the facade.

The interior of the structure includes a two-story banking lobby decorated with marble and ornate molded plaster. Two ranges of square pillars support the lobby's massive ceiling beams; these pillars and the pilasters which flank them feature capitals with dentils and stylized molded ornaments. Recently, a mezzanine was constructed across the east end of this lobby.

Other alterations to the building included the addition of a canopy over the first floor levels of the east and south facades in 1963, and the installation of air conditioner louvers at various points in the south facade sometime after the 1950's. Recent restoration work included the cleaning and tuck-pointing of the exterior masonry, the installation of additional HVAC louvers in the south and east facades, and the replacement of 138 single glazed windows with thermopane units of the same configuration.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Anderson Bank Building is significant for its architecture and for its role in the development of commerce and industry in Madison County, Indiana. A seven-story brick veneer structure with stone and terra-cotta detailing, this building is one of the few Art Deco-style structures remaining in the City of Anderson. Since its completion in January, 1928, the building has housed the main offices of the Anderson Banking Company, the largest commercial bank in Madison County and the oldest financial institution extant in the city.

Although the natural gas supply was practically exhausted by 1910, the Anderson Banking Company had, by that time, become one of the area's strongest financial institutions and continued to expand. By 1916 the firm had absorbed one competing bank and reorganized under a state charter. Consolidation with the Anderson Trust Company in 1926 resulted in an increase in assets to almost $3 million; a final consolidation, this time with the Madison County Trust Company, occurred in 1930. One of the few area banks to survive the Depression, the Anderson Bank has continued to serve the community for over 90 years. For some time this bank has been the largest financial institution in the county, with current assets exceeding $200 million.

The main office of the Anderson Banking Company, constructed in 1927-28, was designed by the prestigious Indianapolis architectural firm of Vonnegut, Bohn and Mueller, and built by Leslie Colvin, of Indianapolis. One of the few Art Deco-style structures in Anderson, the building features limestone and terra cotta detailing on the exterior, while marble and molded plaster grace the interior. This prominently-sited building is also the tallest older structure in the community, and has long been a local landmark.
