Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

601 New York Street is an Italian Villa constructed of brick covered with stucco. The building's massing consists of three two story elements and a three story entrance tower.

The central section of the principal (north) elevation is square in plan with a gable roof, interior chimney and projecting wood cornice with brackets located at either end and at the center under the ridge line. Beneath the center bracket is a small diamond shaped opening. The four window openings in this section of the elevation have limestone sills and decorative iron segmental arched hoods.

A second building mass, comprising part of the north and east elevations, is also square in plan with a gable roof, endwall chimney, projecting wood cornice and four brackets. There is one window opening centered at the second level and a glazed wood door with glazed transom and sidelights at the ground level of the north side.

The entrance tower at the northwest corner is square in plan with a multigabled roof topped with a square based, enclosed cupola. The tower facade includes two windows with semicircular arched window hoods at the third level, a single window opening at the second level and the entrance at ground level. The entrance consists of an enriched overdoor with a keystone, modillions and a semicircular glazed transom. The overdoor is supported by two stone columns which flank double-leaf glazed wood doors.

The third massing element is L-shaped in plan and makes up the south elevation and portions of the east and west elevations. This component repeats the details of the other masses including a gabled roof with projecting cornice and brackets. The window openings of the west elevation are detailed to match those of the central section of the north elevation.

Alterations of the original design include a gabled porch at the main entrance, a terrace across the north elevation and a one story enclosed porch on the west elevation. The roof material is asphalt shingles and the interior chimney has been rebuilt at a lower height.

The interior retains its original curved stair with balustrade in the entrance tower and most of the original trim work.

A one story stucco over masonry garage with gable roof lies behind the main structure. A brick drive in the Herringbone pattern leads to the garage.

A two story masonry carriage house is located to the rear of the property. The structure consists of three two story elements. The main element has a hip roof and the remaining two have gable roofs.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

601 New York Street is significant both architecturally and historically in the development of Lafayette. The building is the focal point of its neighborhood as well as Lafayette's only remaining example of the Italian Villa style. It retains its original character and close association with the period of its construction. Geographically, the house is one of a group of significant residences located along the railroad lines and reflects the early importance of the railroads to everyday life and growth of the city as well as the prestige of being physically associated with a pervasive symbol of progress.
