Summary Paragraph

The Bethel African Methodist Episcopal (A.M.E.) Church of Franklin, Indiana, is located in Franklin, Franklin Township, Johnson County, Indiana, on the southwest corner of West Madison Street and Uitz Street. The nominated site includes the church (photo 0001) and a parsonage (photo 0002), located just east of the church. Both buildings face north on a half-acre lot raised approximately 2 feet above street level (photo 0003). Relatively flat, the lot includes a minimal amount of scattered trees, including specimens of maple and ash. The church is positioned snugly against the north border of the lot, creating an open grassy area to the south. Residences, divided by a paved ally, flank the adjacent south border and continue across Uitz Street to the west of the church. North of the church, across West Madison Street, are more residences and Palmer Park, which is the former site of the Booker T. Washington School (demolished in 1981). The church dates from 1911, while the parsonage dates from c. 1925.<sup>1</sup>

Narrative Description

CHURCH

The mass of the church incorporates a simple one-story, front-gabled building with a medium-pitched gable-on-hip roof. A simple two story, square tower with a square cupola projects from the principal mass, and dominates the north façade; and a large one-story semi-hexagonal apse structure, which resembles a large bay window, protrudes from the south end of the church. The principle mass of the church is one and a half units wide and two units deep. The tower is one unit by one unit.

The church sits on an original concrete block foundation. The identical, decorative concrete foundation blocks are reminiscent of uncut, regular course stones; however, the small faux stones are smooth, symmetrical, and orderly (photo 0009). Basement windows are comprised of frosted glass blocks; however, several of the basement windows have been replaced by cinder blocks. A sill plate, painted taupe and measuring approximately 10 inches wide, trims the foundation.

The church is sheathed in horizontal wood clapboard with the exception of the belfry's vertical wood clapboard: all of the siding is original to the structure and painted white. The wood framing system is of balloon-frame construction. All windows are in good condition and original to the building. With the exception of a paired one-over-one double-hung window on the north façade, and the small casement windows in the tower, the church's windows are original one-over-one double-hung windows measuring approximately 9 feet high and 3 feet wide (photo 0004). Simple wood trim frames each window, with an entablature with cornice-styled window lintel above each opening.

Roofing material over the entire building is of black, plain, coursed, contemporary asphalt shingles. Wood soffits are plain and closed, and painted white to match the main structure. The principle mass' roof includes a wide eave overhang, boxed without brackets, with original, thin wood boards comprising the soffit. The principle structure hip-on-gable roof shape includes a vent.

The original primary entrance to the church is located on the north façade. A contemporary concrete sidewalk leads up six narrow concrete steps; the seventh step is broader, and creates a small stoop. Simple contemporary iron railings are located to the east and the west of the steps. The tower houses the inner vestibule, or foyer, which leads to the sanctuary. Access to the church is gained through the original, double poplar wood two paneled doors, located on the north façade of the tower and are painted white (photo 0005). The doors' original wood <sup>1</sup> The parsonage was constructed between 1916 and 1927 according to the Sanborn Maps, while the County property card identifies a date of 1925. framework includes painted trim work, a simple painted cornice lintel, a rectangular, four-light transom, and brass hardware. The entranceway measures approximately 10 feet high by 6 feet wide. A brass lantern light hangs directly above the entrance doors. A sign painted black with white lettering reads "Bethel A.M.E. Church," and hangs approximately 2 feet to the west of the north façade's double doors.

The square tower of the church is placed in the northwest corner of the structure. The church's square tower previously functioned as a belfry. The bell has been rumored to remain, though access to the belfry is blocked by insulation. The tower's square cupola has a steeply pitched pyramidal hipped roof with a boxed, wide eave overhang, and rests atop the medium-pitched hipped roof, sporting a boxed, slight eave overhang. A brass cross boxed by a painted wood frame, measuring approximately 4 feet by 4 feet, decorates the north façade of the cupola. The east and west façades of the cupola have white painted wood vents. Small square casement windows, approximately 3 ½ feet by 3 ½ feet, with painted wood trim work are centrally located on the tower's north and west façades, between the north entrance doors/west tower window and the medium-pitch hipped roof. A one-over-one double-hung window is located on the west façade of the tower.

To the east of the tower, the north façade includes a centered paired double-hung window with a single double-hung window to the east. The paired double-hung window is approximately 9 feet high and 6 ½ feet wide. The church's east elevation (photo 0001) is comprised of four double-hung windows, spaced approximately 11 feet apart. The west elevation is comprised of three double-hung windows (photo 0006).

A double-hung window is located approximately 3 feet west of the semi-hexagonal apse (photo 0007) on the south elevation. The protruding semi-pentagonal apse houses the church's pulpit. Two double-hung windows, one facing east and one facing west, adorn the structure, which measure approximately 18 ½ feet across the center of the south façade. No openings exist on the apse's southeast, southwest, and south facing elevations. The structure is topped with a polygonal-hipped roof, with a wide eave overhang, boxed without brackets, and original wood boards on the soffit. The apse roof ridge meets the main roof about halfway up its slope. Allowing exterior basement access is a wood, cellar door (photo 0008) sheathed in plain asphalt shingles, directly east of the protruding structure. A rear entrance is located on the southeast corner of the south façade. Three concrete steps lead to the rear entrance's simple wood six-panel frame door, which is painted white. The rear door's wood framework includes original painted wood trim and an original painted wood, cornice lintel.

Access is gained to the church's interior through the double doors located in the north façade. The church's interior retains a notable degree of integrity. Located immediately inside the church's front doors, two steps lead upward to a small foyer (photo 0010). The foyer measures 15 feet by 17 feet. An open staircase, leading to the basement, is located alongside the west wall of the foyer. The staircase is enclosed by simple, dark-stained, pine wood banister approximately 3 ½ high, and a matching wood door with latch, which blocks entry to the stairs. To the north of the stairwell, on the west wall of the foyer, is a one-over-one double hung window with dark stained, pine wood trim, and a simple matching entablature-styled lintel. All interior windows and doors have the same dark-stained pine wood features. The windows measure approximately 9 feet high and 3 feet wide. South of the stairwell, also on the west wall of the foyer, is a simple, small half-bath, a more recent addition, which contains a toilet and a small sink. The half-bath's ceiling measures approximately 8 feet from the floor, alongside the west and east walls of the foyer; creating a ledge. The foyer bathroom protrudes approximately 5 feet from the east wall and 5 feet from the south wall. A five-paneled door is located on the bathroom's east wall and of dark-stained pine wood, with a corresponding wide door frame. Flooring in the foyer is contemporary carpet. Foyer walls are of white painted plaster. The contemporary suspended ceiling, or secondary ceiling, is comprised of acoustical ceiling panels, and measures approximately 19 feet high. A simple single, suspended American vintage light fixture hangs from the ceiling. Swinging six-paneled double doors are located on the south wall of the foyer, and allow access to the sanctuary. Simple brass door plates adorn both sides of the double doors. A six-paneled wood door is located on the east wall of the foyer.

Access to the church's office, which also serves as the children's room during church service, is gained through the foyer's east door. The office (photo 0011) is approximately 12 ½ feet long and 19 feet wide. The contemporary carpet found in the foyer extends into the office, covering the entire office floor. Office walls are also of original painted plaster. The contemporary suspended ceiling is comprised of acoustical tile panels and measures approximately 19 feet high. A simple single, suspended American vintage light fixture hangs from the ceiling. A one-over-one double-hung window, with the same embellishments and measurements as the foyer window, is located on the east wall of the office. The corner wall where the office's south and east walls meet encases a protruding vent, measuring approximately 17 inches by 14 inches. A paired one-over-one double-hung window, measuring approximately 9 feet high and 6 ½ feet wide, is located on the office's north wall. The south wall of the office includes double, twelve-paneled, wood pocket doors (photo 0011), one on either side, each measuring approximately 5 ½ feet wide by 7 ½ feet high. The doors are also dark-stained pine wood. The door frame is comprised of dark-stained pine wood trim work, and a simple matching lintel, which matches the rest of the church's windows and doors framework.

The office's original wood sliding doors allow access to the sanctuary. The sanctuary (photos 0012-0013) measures approximately 40 feet by 50 feet. A water fountain, added circa 1975, is located in the northwest corner, flush against the sanctuary's north wall. A contemporary suspended ceiling, 19 feet high, is comprised of acoustical panels. The ceiling features three simple, suspended American vintage light fixtures above the center aisle. Four contemporary ceiling fans with globe light fixtures are located in the sanctuary, with two on each side of the space. The sanctuary walls retain original, painted plaster. The east and west walls each feature three double-hung windows. These windows are framed in the same fashion as the double-hung window in the foyer. The pews are arranged in rows of nine on the sanctuary's east and west sides. Flooring under the pews is of dark-stained pine wood that is approximately 3 inches in width. Wide wood baseboard trims the perimeter of the entire sanctuary. The sanctuary's center aisle, covered by the contemporary carpet, leads to a three level, horse shoe shaped, raised dais on the south side of the sanctuary. The first level of the altar is raised approximately 8 inches off the floor and encircled by a wood 18 inch high railing, with carpeted open passage ways on either side. The first level flooring matches the dark-stained wood flooring located under the pews. The second level of the altar is raised approximately 18 inches off the first level. The dark-stained pine wood pastor's pulpit is in its place on the second level of the altar. The third level of the altar is raised approximately 8 inches off the second level and is semi-pentagonal in shape. A straight dark-stained pine wood railing measuring approximately 30 inches high and 11 feet across, with open passage ways on either side, is located on the north end of the third level. Two double-hung windows are located on the east and west walls of the apse. The east portion of the south wall has a dark-stained, pine wood six panel door, which provides exterior access. The door's framework is in the same fashion as all the doors and windows – wood trim work, and a simple matching decorative lintel. A double-hung window is located on the west portion of the south wall of the sanctuary. A single pew is located on the west of the sanctuary across from the altar.

The basement is accessed through a wood staircase (photo 0014) in the foyer, completed c. 1915-1921.<sup>2</sup> Currently, the basement serves as a venue for storage. Comprised of concrete block walls and a poured, concrete floor, the first room encountered is approximately 14 feet by 19 feet. The south wall of the first room opens to a wide hallway. Two non-functioning bathrooms are accessed through doorways on the west wall of the hallway. A four paneled wood door on the hallway's south wall accesses a crawl space where the furnace is located. A large second room (photo 0015) is accessed from a doorway in the east wall of the first room. Located at the south end of the second room, a half partition wall separates a nonfunctioning kitchenette. A four panel wood door, located on the south wall, accesses a crawl space and a storage room, which accesses the cellar door.

PARSONAGE

The Bethel A.M.E. Church's parsonage is located directly east of the church. It is clad in original clapboard siding with original wood trim and contains a multi-gabled roof with contemporary asphalt shingles (photo 0002). The structure incorporates a wide eave overhang, boxed without brackets, with original, thin wood boards comprising the soffit. The north façade is comprised of a centrally located bay and a veranda located in the west corner. The east and west façades are similar in construction: both façades incorporate two one-over-one double hung windows with wood trim (photo 0003). The south façade integrates an additional veranda in the east corner. The interior of the parsonage has been altered; however, the exterior is in good condition and retains integrity as a secondary structure to the church.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

ETHNIC HERITAGE

The Bethel A.M.E. Church represents the built heritage of the African American community of Franklin. It is located within a neighborhood that unofficially served the African American families of Franklin. The church building continues to serve the African American community of Franklin, while the parsonage is now in private ownership. The Bethel A.M.E Church in Franklin is one of the only architectural examples of the history of the African American community in Johnson County.

After the Civil War, a variety of religious denominations of the black community settled in Johnson County, Indiana. In 1867 Pastor W.S. Lankford,<sup>3</sup> of the Allen Chapel in Indianapolis, organized the Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church of Franklin. Birthed by the Allen Chapel of Indianapolis, the church was affectionately referred to as “Little Bethel,” though the word “little” was discarded by Reverend C.L. Upthegrove circa 1916.<sup>4</sup> Though unsubstantial records were accumulated or maintained regarding the black population of Franklin, a disproportionate number of minority black families of various denominations settled in west-central Franklin; where the Bethel A.M.E. Church is appropriately situated on the southeast corner of Uittz Street and Madison Avenue.<sup>5</sup>

Recorded in Johnson County on August 27, 1867, a Warranty Deed lists lots 19 and 20, located in southwest Franklin, purchased for $150 from the Uittz family to the A.M.E. Church of Franklin.<sup>6</sup> In 1868, Franklin's first black house of worship was built on the western boundary of Lot 19 by Dr. W.R. Rebils, assisted by Reverend F. Roberts. A parsonage was built the same year on the northeast corner of Lot 19. Reverend Henry Brown, Sr. served as the Church's first pastor. The Bethel A.M.E. Church housed the small black religious community of Franklin, despite different denominational beliefs. On April 26, 1904, the Church members organized to discuss the future of the congregation. At that meeting, the members voted to build a new church on the northwest corner of the Lot 20. The foundation for the church was laid in 1907, but it was completed in October of 1911, while the current parsonage was constructed in 1925.<sup>7</sup> The Sanborn Map from 1916 illustrates the new church in the northwest corner of Lot 20, the original church in the west center of Lot 19, and the original parsonage in the northeast corner of Lot 19.<sup>8</sup> The Sanborn Map from 1927 just illustrates the current layout, with the church in the northwest corner of Lot 20 and the parsonage in the northwest corner of Lot 19.<sup>9</sup> Since its inception, the Bethel A.M.E. Church of Franklin has served as a religious center in Johnson County, and still houses Methodist congregations affiliated with the original Bethel A.M.E. Church.<sup>10</sup>

The Bethel A.M.E. Church served an important role in the education, spiritual development, and socialization of the African American population in Franklin. The church stewards organized concerts and socials, Thanksgiving dinners, a literary society, and Sunday school. The members were split into classes, where they would organize, meet, and receive education from their class leaders.<sup>11</sup> The parsonage played a significant role in the history of the Bethel A.M.E. Church, greatly contributing to religious undertakings of A.M.E. parishioners by providing an outfit where the church and community could convene. The building functioned as a place to host meals and community socials, and served as a meeting place for church committees and church clubs, in addition providing lodging for church pastors, which illustrates a traditional concept once common for religious properties. The impact of the church on the community was not only the church, but the freely dispensed guidance given by the pastor, whose house was open to the public.

Throughout its history, the Bethel A.M.E of Franklin has considered how national affairs and politics affect the black community. On December 2, 1935, church minutes reveal an A.M.E. Brotherhood Club meeting in which a discussion was held, “whether the negro should vote either democratic or republican.”<sup>12</sup> Records also indicate a meeting held that same year, in which Church members contemplated whether, “the Negro have a better opportunity in the South than he has in the North.”<sup>13</sup> Since the A.M.E.’s inauguration, black clergy have been viewed by the African community not only as religious shepherds, but as inspired political leaders, who have blazed trails in civil rights, education enrichment, and community development.<sup>14</sup>

The Bethel A.M.E. Church of Franklin labors to nurture and maintain enduring relationships with local community organizations. Committees and Commissions of the Bethel A.M.E. Church have partnered with Franklin College and the Franklin community to commemorate and mark historic national events, as well as host national organizations. Contributions to the Franklin community include: pitch-in meals, in which other community organizations were invited to participate; tea’s sponsored by A.M.E.’s Missionary Society; a statewide Bible teacher’s convention, which the church hosted in 1912; and various reunions in which the Bethel A.M.E. served as the meeting site.

Many active and principle members of the Bethel A.M.E. Church of Franklin have contributed to significant historical events both locally and nationally, as well as acquired prominent positions in Franklin society and government. A.M.E. preacher and committee member John Fosset, who also appears on the 1867 deed, served in the Union Army and was later appointed chaplain of the Grand Army of the Republic in Franklin. His wife Mary Fossett begged the first dollar for the first church building, and nailed the first church lath on the new church building in 1911.<sup>15</sup> Their daughter Hattie Fosset, born December 14, 1864, was the first black student to attend Franklin High School and Franklin College. An active member in the A.M.E. Church, Ms. Fosset served as its Sunday School Superintendent, President of the Missionary Society, and taught adult Bible classes. Additional noteworthy black citizens of Franklin and members of the A.M.E. Church include former slave H.C. Moorman, who served as pastor circa 1903; and Civil War veteran Semuel Stokes who served as pastor in 1906 (also listed on the 1867 deed).<sup>16</sup> Franklin native and A.M.E. member John Montgomery was the first black man to be elected to Franklin’s City Council, where he served a four-year term ending in 1980. For service to the church and community of Franklin, the Bethel A.M.E. Church bestowed the Quality of Life Award to resident Martha Wales, who was Franklin’s “first black person to ever be appointed to run a city department.”<sup>17</sup> Both past and present congregations of Bethel A.M.E. are ripe with acclaimed citizens who have contributed substantially to Franklin’s black history.<sup>18</sup>

A.M.E. Churches have served as the center of black communities throughout America. They have played significant roles in the education of the black population, while providing spiritual and moral guidance. A.M.E. Churches have sheltered blacks in dark times: allowing them freely participate and be treated as equals; and discuss politics, philanthropic endeavors, and the role of the black person in society. The building which houses the Bethel A.M.E. Church serves as a representative of Franklin’s black community and their efforts. Its preservation epitomizes America’s struggle to procure and maintain freedom and equality for people of all creeds, as well as preserve the ethnic heritage of the African-Americans of Franklin and their contribution to its history. Prominent members of Franklin’s A.M.E. have honored their churches teachings by contributing to historical local and national affairs.

Comparables

The Bethel A.M.E. Church illustrates the ethnic heritage of African Americans at the local level of significance in Franklin, Indiana. The church is located in a historically predominate African American neighborhood in Franklin and served as a community center for the population. The African Methodist Episcopal Church was identified as Notable in the 1985 Johnson County Interim Report.<sup>19</sup> Two other community buildings served the African American community in Franklin: the Booker T. Washington School and the Second Baptist Church. The Booker T. Washington School was located in the lot to the north of the Bethel A.M.E. Church, but was demolished in 1981. The Second Baptist Church is still extant and is located on West Madison Street, to the northeast of the Bethel A.M.E. Church. The Second Baptist Church was only identified as contributing in the 1985 Johnson County Interim Report; the Bethel A.M.E. Church retains a higher level of integrity than the Second Baptist Church.<sup>20</sup> In comparing the two congregations, the congregation and history of the Bethel A.M.E. Church has deeper ties to the history of the African American community at large in the City of Franklin. As such, the Bethel A.M.E. Church of Franklin best illustrates the architecture of the Ethnic Heritage of the African American population in Franklin.

Developmental History/Additional historic context information

Development of the African Methodist Episcopal Church

At the end of the eighteenth century, the United States free black population experienced discrimination in churches of mixed race, thereby; they established churches of their own where they could freely participate and enjoy equality. First assembled by Richard Allen in Philadelphia during 1794, the African Methodist Episcopal Church emerged as the United States most important black church.<sup>21</sup> The mission of the A.M.E. Church “included development of the mind and ‘elevation of race’ through temperance, good personal habits, and fulfillment of spiritual needs.”<sup>22</sup> In 1830 in Philadelphia, Allen led what appears to be the first colored convention. A.M.E. clergy actively participated in subsequent conventions, which were held to raise racial consciousness, frame “petitions for the removal of constitutional and legal disabilities,” and to implore blacks to “improve their position through education and industry.”<sup>23</sup> A.M.E. Churches have emerged as one of the largest and most important black church in the United States. After the Civil War, A.M.E. Churches were the most prevalent among the black population in Indiana, and commenced wherever large Negro communities congregated.

Throughout the United States, A.M.E. Churches have served as the religious, social, and political center of the black community. They provided leadership and participated substantially in governmental affairs concerning the black populations fight for freedom and equality. In his book, 12 Million Black Voices, novelist Richard Wright declares, “It is only when we are within the walls of our churches that we are wholly ourselves, that we keep alive a sense of our personalities in relation to the total world in which we live...”<sup>24</sup> In 1858, an African American expressed the A.M.E. Church’s contribution to the black population, asserting “If there never had been an A.M.E. Church in this country there would have been no place where we could have exercised to any extent the talent which God has given to us.”<sup>25</sup> He further states, “The A.M.E. Church has done more for the elevation of the colored people than all the other denominations in this country...All the religious liberty that the colored people enjoy in this country is attributed to the organization of the A.M.E. Church.”<sup>26</sup> A.M.E. Churches not only offered religious sanction and refuge from discrimination, but were a dynamic force in promoting morality, pride, unity, and education for the development and enhancement of the black community.

African Americans in Indiana

In the antebellum era, Indiana acquired three general groups of immigrant blacks: “free persons in the state which they resided before coming to Indiana;”<sup>27</sup> recently emancipated slaves; and fugitive slaves. Though slavery in Indiana was forbidden, harsh laws and intolerance made life complicated for the black community, none-the-less, many were able to obtain land establishing themselves as independent farmers, find work as laborers, and gain work employing a variety of other expertise. The Indiana census of 1820 lists 1,420 African Americans: by 1860 their number increased substantially to 11,428.<sup>28</sup> By 1854, more than one-fifth of blacks in Indiana were members of the A.M.E. Church, with a total membership of 1,387.

The city of Franklin, the county seat of Johnson County, is situated near the center of the county, twenty miles south of Indianapolis. Rich and fertile soils beckoned farmers, bringing the first settlers to Franklin. Laid out in 1822, Franklin had a population of approximately 1,750 by 1850, and was officially organized as a city by 1862. By 1880, six church buildings existed in Franklin. Four housed congregations of mainly white worshipers representing the Baptist, Christian, Methodist, and Presbyterian denominations. Two represented the black population of Franklin: the Second Baptist Church and the Bethel A.M.E. Church.

Bethel A.M.E. Franklin's Role in the Community

On November 23, 1987, church records denote a convocation held at the Franklin College Chapel to celebrate the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. On February 21, 1988, the Bethel A.M.E. Church organized a joint worship service between Franklin College and the Franklin community in celebration of Black History Month. Franklin citizens, community leaders, and students gathered to hear guest speakers Reverend Walter W. Reid, Professor Paul T. Nugent, and Franklin College President Bryan Martin.<sup>29</sup>

Since its inception, the Bethel A.M.E. Church has been committed to helping the elderly, impoverished, and disadvantaged people of Franklin. Franklin's current A.M.E. Church parishioners maintain the founder's aspirations of community involvement and aid. Community undertakings include visiting those unable to attend church, because of disabilities, and assembling and distributing food, clothes, and personal items to the indigent and handicap. Church records state, "The Church supplied four needy families with turkey, hams and all the trimmings for a wonderful Thanksgiving day dinner."<sup>30</sup> Additionally, the A.M.E. Church has catered meals for bereaved families succeeding funerals, and provided assistance to destitute foreign countries.

Due to lack of funding, in 1974, a church committee elected to rent the parsonage as a way to offset the costs of maintaining both buildings.<sup>31</sup> However, the committee had difficulty collecting rent from tenants and financing general maintenance, and chose to sell the parsonage in 1980.<sup>32</sup>
