Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance of the property. Explain contributing and noncontributing resources if necessary. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, setting, size, and significant features.)

Summary Paragraph

The Oren F. and Adella Parker House was constructed between 1915-1917. It is an outstanding example of an architect-designed Craftsman bungalow with some Tudor Revival stylistic details. The house is located at a prominent corner in a neighborhood just outside of Rensselaer's historic commercial district on the main thoroughfare of the city. The house's walls are composed of brick and its roof is covered with green tiles. Two features dominate the exterior of the house. A large porte cochere is located on the Washington Street side of the house and an enclosed porch is on the front (Park Avenue) of the house. The interior of the house has a tremendous amount of craftsmanship evident in its woodwork and painted murals.

Narrative Description

Exterior (photographs 0001-0004)

The Parker House is located in a prominent location on the southwest corner of Park and Washington Streets in the historic Milroy Park neighborhood of Rensselaer. The property corner at the intersection is located at true north due to the street grid's angle. Therefore the front of the house (facing Park Avenue) faces northeast. For purposes of this document northeast is considered east, northwest is north, etc. The lot is covered with lawn and has concrete sidewalks along each street. A half-circle asphalt driveway is located off of Washington Street; it leads to and under a porte cochere on this side of the house. A concrete sidewalk is located on the west and south sides of the house. A few large trees are located in the tree lawn near the street. A large spruce tree is located on the northwest side of the house.

The house is two stories tall and has side gables. The home's basement windows are located above ground at the bottom of the home's walls. A large porte cochere is on the home's Washington Street side. The house has a foundation composed of limestone and its walls are composed of dark brown-colored bricks with some minor variation of dark red-colored bricks. Most of the windows are wood, double-hung, Craftsman-style with stone sills. They are placed without a specific pattern; there are a few locations where rows of windows are located in the walls. The roof has wide-overhanging eaves that are supported by large wood brackets composed of heavy timbers. The roof is covered with green-colored clay tiles. Copper downspouts and leader boxes are located on the house.

The dominant feature of the home's Park Avenue (front) wall is the incised porch on the main level of the house (photo 0001). The porch's enclosed walls are original to the design of the home. The porch's front wall is enclosed by a row of eight Craftsman-style windows. The top of the enclosed wall forms a broad pointed arch above the windows, which is composed of stone and has egg and dart trim. Large square brick columns are located on each corner of the porch. Their capitals are stone and have details that appear to be inspired by Chicago architect Louis Sullivan. The capitals have a compressed appearance, and are highly-articulated with thin horizontal layering of trim details including rows of dentils and egg and dart moldings. The sides of the porch are enclosed by four Craftsman-style windows. A broad pointed stone arch is also at the top of the porch's sides. The Park Avenue facade also has a large gabled roof dormer centered on the wall. The dormer's front wall is composed of a row of eight Craftsman-style windows with a pointed arch, which is covered with stucco. The dormer's walls are covered with green-colored clay tiles. The dormer's roof has a low pitch and its outside corners are supported by large carved wood brackets.

The Washington Street (north) side of the house is dominated by the large porte cochere that is located near the west end of the gabled wall (photo 0002-0003). The porte cochere is supported on its outside corners by two square brick columns with stone capitals that match the front porch. The roof is gabled with a very broad, low pitch. The east and west eaves of the porte cochere come within about seven feet of the ground. The eaves on the north side of the porte cochere are supported just above the columns by pairs of large carved wood brackets. The beam between the columns forms a broad pointed arch that is covered with stucco. The main entry to the house is located on the east wall of an enclosed area under the porte cochere. The door is very wide and is composed of wood with a window in its upper portion. The window is composed of twenty-four small square panes of glass. A row of five narrow windows is centered in the north wall of the enclosed area of the porte cochere. They have stone trim in the shape of a capital letter "T" between them.

The north side of the house is composed of a side gable and an original two-story extension on the back (west) side of the house. The first floor of the gabled wall has three windows east of the porte cochere; these are located in the living room wall. A row of four narrow windows is centered in the wall above the porte cochere. They have stone trim in the shape of a "T" between them. Two large windows are located in the gable wall east of the row of windows. A small window is located in the gable wall east of the two large windows. It is located in a bathroom on the second level. A window is located at the top of the gable wall in the attic. A large carved wood bracket supports the roof eave on each side of the attic window. The side gable has long cornice returns at the top of the first floor's walls.

The two-story extension on the west end of the north wall has a wood door with a full-length, divided window on the first floor, just west of the porte cochere. A larger wood door with a full-length, divided window is located in the first floor wall west of the first door. A wide, short metal window is located in the first floor wall west of the second door. The second door and this window are located in a wall that enclosed a former garage stall in c. 1935. The second floor of the extension's north wall has two windows.

The south side of the house is also composed of a side gable and a two-story extension on its west end (see photo 0001). A one-story extension, which houses a portion of the dining room, is located on the west end of the side gable's first floor. The one-story extension's south wall has a row of four short windows. A terrace with a brick wall is located off the west side of the one-story extension. Concrete steps are located on the west side of the terrace. The side gable has a wide chimney centered in the wall. A window is located to each side of the chimney on the side gable's first and second floors. The second floor's wall has a small window located to each side of the windows located on each side of the chimney. A window is also centered in the second floor wall above the one-story extension. Large carved brackets support the eaves on each side of the chimney near the top of the roof. Gable returns are located above the enclosed porch and one-story dining room extension.

The south wall of the two-story extension has a wood door with a full window on its first floor, that leads to the terrace, just west of the one-story extension. A 1/1 wood window is located in the first floor wall west of the terrace. A chimney is located between the door and the window. The second floor of the extension has a small window located just west of the gabled wall. Two 1/1 wood windows are located west of the chimney. These are located in a sleeping porch on the second floor.

The west wall of the house is the west wall of the two-story extension (photo 0004). The wall is gabled and has four large carved wood brackets that support the eaves. A row of four 1/1 wood windows, on the south end of the first floor wall, are located in the kitchen. A large wood window that is horizontally divided into three panes of glass is located in the east end of the first floor's wall in the former garage. The second floor's west wall has two 1/1 wood windows in its south end; these are located in the sleeping porch. Two smaller windows are located in the wall north of the sleeping porch's windows. A window is also located in the north end of the second floor wall. A small 1/1 wood window is centered in the top of the gable wall in the attic.

Interior (photographs 0005-0015)

The house has three levels and an entry level off of the porte cochere. Most of the areas in the house are open to each other. A grand open staircase on the north side of the house connects each of the levels (photo 0008). The floors are composed of oak planks throughout except its lower level, which is concrete. The house also has an extensive amount of original wood trim that has a dark stain. Windows and doors have pointed hoods between vertical trim boards that extend from the sides of the doors and windows above the hoods; the trim boards have wood caps. This detail, and pointed arches that compose wainscot in the dining room, give the interior of the house a Tudor appearance. The doors in the house are wood and have three tall vertical panels. The house also has most of its original brass and glass chandeliers and wall sconces.

The lower level has a ballroom in its east end and mechanical rooms in its west end. The ballroom has a fireplace composed of bricks on its south wall (right side of photo 0005). Plaster and lath have been removed to approximately three feet from the floor on the exterior walls of the ballroom due to moisture damage. The grand staircase is located in the entry off the porte cochere (lower right hand corner of photo 0008). It is composed of carved wood balusters and newel posts. Wood wainscot follows the outside walls of the staircase. A bathroom and coat closet are on the west side of the entry. A second, smaller wood staircase is located in the southwest corner of the house. It also connects all of the levels and is identified as a servants' staircase (photo 0007).

The main level of the house has a living room on its east side (photos 0009, 0011) with the enclosed porch off the east wall (seen in photo 0006 and from the living room in photo 0011). The living room has a fireplace composed of bricks with built-in casework on each side (left side of photo 0009). A dining room is on the south side of the main level (photo 0010). It has tall wainscoting on each of its walls and a hand-painted mural above it. The mural depicts a continuous landscape scene. A large built-in buffet is centered on the south wall (photo 0010). The buffet has a short mirror on top and tapered legs on each front corner. The dining room ceiling has exposed wood beams with plaster between them. Large openings are located between the dining room and living room (as seen in photo 0009) and between the dining room and the grand staircase. A bench is built into the grand staircase at the main level (seen in photo 0008).

A kitchen is located on the west side of the main level. A dumbwaiter is located in the northwest corner of the kitchen. Aside from the dumbwaiter and doors leading out of the kitchen, no other original features are extant. No cabinetry or other trim is located in the kitchen. The walls are plaster, the floors are composed of oak planks, and the ceiling has acoustic tiles glued to it.

The second story has a total of six main rooms and two bathrooms. One room is marked as a sleeping room on the blueprints and is located in the southwest corner of the house. A large sitting room is located on the south side of the second floor (photo 0014). It has a large fireplace composed of bricks on its south wall. There are four bedrooms located on the second floor. Two are located on the north side of the house and another is located on the south side of the house (photo 0013), west of the sitting room. The fourth bedroom is located in the gabled dormer area on the front of the house. There are a few small dressing rooms and closets between the bedrooms. The dressing rooms have built-in casework. The bathrooms are located on the east and west ends of the house. The bathrooms have most of their original fixtures including tubs and a shower in the west bathroom (photo 0012). An attic staircase, just west of the grand staircase, leads from the main hallway on the second level to the attic (photo 0015).

The second floor rooms have floors composed of oak planks and walls are covered with plaster. The second floor ceilings are also covered with plaster. The second floor has simple baseboards. Windows and doors have pointed hoods between vertical trim boards that extend from the sides of the doors and windows above the hoods; the trim boards have wood caps. The doors are wood and have three tall vertical panels. The second floor also has most of its original brass wall sconces.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance and applicable criteria.)

The Oren F. and Adella Parker House is eligible to be listed in the National Register of Historic Places under criterion C. The house is an impressive example of Craftsman architecture with a significant level of detail in its interior finishes. The house is also significant because its features and floor plan are almost entirely original to its construction. Only slight modifications occurred when the small incised garage was converted to living space.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

ARCHITECTURE

The house is an excellent example of an architect-designed Craftsman-style home, though it has both Prairie and Tudor Revival influences in its details. It has remained largely unaltered from its original construction during about 1915-1917. A Chicago architectural firm named F. Mead Walter created the plans for the house in 1914. The house was constructed by Fred McColly of Rensselaer.

The home's design is predominantly Craftsman-inspired; however there are subtle influences of both the Prairie and Tudor Revival styles. This eclectic mix of styles provides a great deal of the charm that the home exhibits. It is possibly the best example of Craftsman architecture in Rensselaer. A few of the dominant features of the exterior are the use of intricately carved stone capitals for the porch and porte cochere columns (see photo 0003), large wood brackets composed of heavy timbers that support the roof's wide-overhanging eaves, and the use of green-colored clay tiles to cover the roof. The front porch and porte cochere are both large features on the house. The porte cochere is especially unique due to its very broad, low-pitched roof.

The Tudor Revival style is best represented in the home's interior wood trim. The door and window hoods are pointed; other trim in the house also has pointed arches (photo 0011). Pointed arches are also seen on the exterior; they form broad openings for the porch and porte cochere. A few of the interior's dominant features include the large, four-level, open stairway in the entry (photo 0008). The wood stairway is constructed of carved handrails and balusters. It has a bench built into the main level; the underside of the staircase is also paneled with wood. The dining room is one of the most impressive spaces in the house (photo 0010). It is immediately off the south side of the stair hall on the main level. It has a tall wainscot composed of wood trim boards that form pointed arches around panels composed of plaster. Above the wainscot is a hand-painted mural of a landscape scene on canvas on each of the room's four walls. This room also has a large built-in wood buffet on its south wall.

Other interior features include original light fixtures, bathroom fixtures, fireplaces on all three levels, and an extensive amount of built-in casework. Very little has been altered inside the home. It was converted into a duplex at one time, but no historic walls were removed to accommodate the duplex. A small garage was once located on the northwest corner of the house, but it was converted into living space as part of the kitchen. The current owner is converting the home into his family's residence.

Minor references to the Prairie Style are seen in the home's low-pitched roof on the porte cochere as well as the stone capitals that support the roof. The capitals have a compressed appearance, and are highly-articulated with thin horizontal layering of trim details. The roofs have wide overhanging eaves, and rows of windows provide the stereotypical horizontal appearance common in Prairie architecture.

Craftsman-Bungalow Style

The Parker House is best classified as a Craftsman bungalow, though the house's details show an eclectic mix of other styles popular during the early 20th century. The Craftsman style was inspired primarily by the work of brothers Charles and Henry Greene in California. Their work spanned from 1893 to 1914; in 1903 they began applying Craftsman details to

Parker, Oren F. and Adella, House
Name of Property

Jasper County, IN County and State

simple bungalows that quickly became popularized by several home magazines of the period. The term bungalow originates in India where it refers to a low house surrounded by porches. The American form of the bungalow began in California and spread quickly through the country as an acceptable and desirable style for the growing middle class in quickly developing suburbs. These homes were popularized in pattern books and other home magazines, again through the work of the Greene brothers of California.

The Parker House has a very identifiable, typical bungalow form. It has side gables with an incised front porch and a gabled dormer centered on the front wall. Leading details of the Craftsman style on the Parker House include the home's wood windows with their mullions in a pattern termed as "Craftsman". The home's use of carved stone details and large carved wood brackets that support the eaves both display a hand-crafted execution of the details that are common in Craftsman style architecture. The interior details that have a Craftsman appearance include some of the most impressive features of the home. These details include the grand staircase's carved balusters and newel posts and the dining room's buffet. These are the most significant hand-crafted features of the house.

The Chicago influence on architecture is also part of the home's construction. The wide entry door with small square windows and the general interior layout of rooms is similar to Prairie Style architecture of the period. The spaces flow into each other and multiple levels are visible to each other from the grand staircase. This creates the sense that the ceilings are fairly low and the area is organized more horizontally. The carved stone capitals and the egg-and-dart trim at the top of the porch's walls both display a quality identified with Louis Sullivan. The stone capitals have a blended Prairie Style appearance with Sullivan's work. The capitals are supported by a carved, flat corbel centered in each wall of the square column. A row of dentils is at the base of the capital, and the cornice has a wide overhang with a row of egg-and-dart trim at their top.

The other popular style of the period that is part of the home's construction is the Tudor Revival style. Predominantly this is identified by the wood trim in the house. The home's doors and windows have pointed arches as does the wainscot in the dining room. The hand-painted mural above the dining room wainscot is another feature of the house that heightens the importance handcrafted details were to both the designer and the home's owners. No information other than the name of the home's architect can be found, though it appears he may have concentrated his work in residential design in the region in and around Chicago.

Developmental history/additional historic context information (if appropriate)

The home's original owners were Oren F. and Adella (Harris) Parker. Mrs. Parker more commonly went by "Della" during her life. The Parkers were merchants in the city of Rensselaer. They were married in 1901 in Rensselaer, but never had any children. Oren Francis Parker was born in 1875 and was the second generation of his family to live in Jasper County. His father and mother, Francis and Mahala Walker Parker, were farmers in Barkley Township. They maintained two farms north of Rensselaer that totaled 413 acres after they moved into the city in 1893.

Oren F. Parker is shown on a roster of students who attended Indiana University in 1892. It appears that after their marriage in 1901, Oren and Della purchased a home in Rensselaer. In 1910 and 1920 Oren is identified in the federal census as the merchant of a department store in Rensselaer. In 1930 he is identified as a salesman and in 1940 he is identified as a retired farmer. During the 1920s the Parkers had a niece, Marion, also living with them. Oren F. and Della Parker also owned a significant amount of agricultural land outside the city, likely his father's farms. A public sale of the farms occurred in 1948. Oren died in 1952. The home remained in the Parker family until Della's death in 1962.
