recreational facility close to home. By 1966 the Big Blue River Conservancy District started to make that dream reality. The group's goals included flood control along the river and waterway improvement, in addition to a recreational facility.

Construction of the flood-control structure at the headwaters of the Big Blue River that created Summit Lake began in the mid-1970s. When the gates of the dam closed in 1980, the man-made lake began to fill. In 1988, after several years of planning and construction, the Big Blue River Recreation Area was sold to the state of Indiana and became Summit Lake State Park. The name comes from being located at the highest elevation in the surrounding area and near the highest elevation in the state.

Present-day visitors will find an array of habitats at Summit Lake. Historically, the area was primarily forested. J. Hendricks, surveyor, wrote in 1821 that the area in the western portion of the park was prairie and wet prairie lands. Located just north of the town of New Castle and U.S. 36, the combination of the 800-acre lake, woodlands, old fields, wetlands and prairie restoration areas at the state park allows for an abundant array of flora and fauna species.

Bird watchers will be especially delighted to find the variety of interesting bird species reported during the migratory seasons as well as resident species. Some unusual bird species that have been observed include the marsh wren, least bittern, American bittern, king rail, osprey, bald eagle, black tern and great egret.

Summit Lake State Park is also the home of Henry County's only dedicated nature preserve, Zeigler Woods, which is located in the southwest corner of the park. Given to the state by The Nature Conservancy, the preserve is reflective of pre-settlement Indiana's native mesic upland forest communities. Zeigler Woods presents a rich exhibit of flora and fauna with little evidence of human disturbance. Unfortunately, such areas are becoming increasingly rare.

Anglers, swimmers, bird watchers and wildlife photographers are among the many admirers of Summit Lake State Park. The 2,680 acres, including an 800-acre lake, shady wooded areas, and lots of open space, serves as home for many woodland animals and more than 100 species of birds.

Fish—and fishermen—love it, too. Bass, sunfish, crappies, yellow perch and channel catfish abound.

Boat rentals include paddleboats, rowboats, kayaks and canoes. Guests can also launch their own craft at one of three boat ramps. The large swimming beach is open from Memorial Day to Labor Day. A modern bathhouse and concession building, including restrooms, is located at the beach.

Six hiking trails offer a good view of the lake. All campsites are 50/30/20 amp electric with water hookups.

Summit Lake became Indiana's 19th state park on Jan. 9, 1988, but its history traces back to the 1950s, when Henry County residents began to talk of having a
