

FINRA Investor Education Foundation & SaveAndInvest.org

Whether on-base or deployed overseas, it is important that you have access to financial education information that enables you to make sound saving and investing decisions for yourself and your family. The FINRA Investor Education Foundation, a subsidiary of the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority, is your source for straight-talking, unbiased, advertisement-free information and tools to help you manage your money with confidence.

We actively support military personnel and families by delivering free, financial education tools and training to service members, their spouses and on-base financial educators through a variety of programs and public awareness initiatives.

As a collaborator in the Department of Defense Military Financial Readiness Program, we offer:

- ▶ An online resource center (SaveAndInvest.org) that serves as a centralized, trusted source for information on saving and investing, including Investor Alerts, personal finance articles and tips, downloadable and customizable Action Plans and worksheets, interactive tools and games, videos and more;
- ▶ myFICO, an ad-free credit score and analysis tool available at no-cost to currently serving military and their spouses;
- ▶ On-base activities and events to encourage families to take ownership of their financial well-being;
- ▶ Training and materials for military financial educators and military spouses; and
- ▶ Financial calculators and other tools to allow you to determine your financial net worth, how much you need to save for college or retirement, or how much you're paying to borrow money for your mortgage or car loan.

We believe investor protection begins with education. Whether you are looking for help with the financial basics, controlling debt, saving for the future or protecting your money, you will find a variety of helpful content and tools from the FINRA Foundation online at SaveAndInvest.org.
