

Courtney Arango

Courtney Arango is a native Hoosier who has spent her professional career working to make Indiana a better place to live and work. Courtney serves as the Director of Government Affairs for AES Indiana, the electric service provider for Indianapolis and parts of central Indiana. In this role, Courtney leads a team that advocates for policies to ensure safe, reliable and affordable energy solutions for more than 520,000 customers. In addition to her energy advocacy work, Courtney serves on a number of boards and committees that improve Indiana's economic position and increase the quality of life in Hoosier communities.

Prior to her current role, Courtney led communications for AES Indiana, including serving as the company spokeswoman and leading the transition from Indianapolis Power & Light Company to AES Indiana. Earlier in her career, Courtney served as the communications leader for various state agencies, as well as a press secretary for the Indiana Senate Majority Caucus and communications director for Governor Eric Holcomb.

Courtney resides in Hendricks County with her husband and their dog.
